Excerpt from The Effects of Shift in Motivation Upon the Learning of a Sensori-Motor Task Since the question of motivation is such an important one at the present time to the economist, scientist, statesman, teacher, and many others, it is not surprising to find that it has in the past aroused (and still continues to do so) much experimental work in the field of psychology. Motivation is not only important in our adult life but is of the utmost Significance in the development of the child. It serves as a means of social control, is of importance in the formation of habits and the acquisition of skills and knowledge, and aids in building up, what society considers to be, an appropriate attitude toward life.
