Franks War in a Thornycroft - (An Army Service Corps Diary). Frank Sanderson was born and raised in the City of Hull before he enlisted into the Army Service Corps in 1915. He did this out of an Edwardian workaday sense of duty and honour, and even though it was against military law, he kept a daily diary about his war experiences. Frank wrote in his journals every day from the 29th April 1915 until the 12th January 1917, the book takes us from enlistment, through his limited two week military training and right up to his last day at Albert in France. Franks last entry in the left hand column simply reads, 12th. This book isn't about the usual, Life in the Trenches type of manuscript that has been published by an Officer and a Gentleman. For any Great War aficionado, or even for those with a modicum of interest in the First World War, this book is a fascinating read about the detailed life of an Army Driver serving in the British Army at the...
