Not illustrated. 1870 Excerpt: .Frank carefully took hold of the reins, and stood by the horse s head. Little did he think as he was thus occupied, and thanking God for giving him in so short a time this, as it appeared, direct answer to his prayer, that the gentleman was watching him from the window above. I say, Abel, said Mr. Slater, addressing his partner, that s a nice lad there holding my horse. Yes, he appears to be thinking of something serious, by his countenance. No doubt he s thinking about what I m going to give him. MR. SLATER QUESTIONS FRANK. 61 Did you make him a good offer then, Slater, to hold your horse? I promised him a night s supper, and I shall never forget the look he gave me. It seemed to go through me. Oh, it s only one of your generous impulses, that s all. Come, let us decide about this order; it s getting late. With that they both consulted together, and finally concluded their arrangements; then, bidding each other goodnight, Mr. Slater descended to his gig. Well, my man, I m glad to see you so careful; here s half-a-crown for you. Frank could scarcely believe either his eyes or his ears, and, ere he had summoned up words of thanks, Mr. Slater added, Did I understand you to say that you had nothing to do. Yes, sir. How s that? I m a stranger in London, sir; I came...
