Excerpt: . . . animal environment is a combination of moisture, temperature, light, pressure, materials for abode and food, all of which factors taken together constitute a complex of interdependences. These various factors are so dependent upon one another that any change in one usually affects several others. This property of environmental complexes is what makes ecology one of the most complex of sciences, and experimentation in which the environment is kept normal except for one factor, an ideal rarely realized in practice, even under the best conditions. The efforts of ecologists, geographers, and climatologists have long been directed toward the finding of a method of measuring the environment which shall include a number of the most important environmental factors. De Candolle undertook to base the efficiency of a climate, for supporting plants, upon the mean daily temperatures above 6 C, this temperature being taken as the starting-point...
